

Little Bohemia Shootout

April, 1934

Public Enemy Number One, John Dillinger, and his gang and their wives/girlfriends are hiding out in the Little Bohemia Lodge in Wisconsin. The FBI, alerted to their presence, has sent a crack team of agents under Hugh Clegg and Melvin Purvis to secure his arrest – or death.

The lodge itself is a two-story building, with the restaurant, bar, kitchen, lobby and sitting room on the ground floor, sleeping rooms above. The back of the building faces Little Star Lake. A driveway snakes from the lodge to the “front” edge of the board. There are several sleeping cabins adjacent to the main building and a large garage.

There are several cars parked around the lodge, and the FBI has two cars at the edge of the table.

The Dillinger gang starts anywhere in the Lodge. There are a few civilians dining at the restaurant (it's $1 dinner night), and the Lodge's owners, Emile and Nan Wanatka, plus assorted service staff, in the building.

The object of the gang is to escape from any of the three "land" board edges (there is no boat on the lake, and it's too far to swim). The object of the FBI is to kill or capture as many gang members as they can.

What Really Happened

A car full of diners leaving the restaurant were shot when they didn't hear the FBI's shouts to stop. The gunshots alerted the gang, who fired a few shots, then escaped out a back window and down to the lake, where they were able to escape notice in a steep ditch – all except Babyface Nelson, who started a gun battle with the agents before escaping. Nelson's wife and the gang's girlfriends were arrested in the lodge, and charged with Harboring Fugitives.
